CHAPTER XVIII

IN THE MATHESIS.

I felt for several minutes smothered by a strange terror. There could be no mistake about it. The mysterious gift, repeated after the lapse of centuries in my life, had departed forever.

My vanity was my own downfall. Yielding to a silly pride, I had made a vain display of my incredible strength, and now it had vanished, and I was as ordinary men.

Singular that during all my life, when I was not as others, the feeling of awe, though present with me in a greater or less degree, never approached in height and breadth and depth that of which now I was deprived.

And yet it should not have been so. Rather the emotion should have been one of inexplicable relief that the supernatural element had been eliminated and that I was walking on the plane of my fellow mortals.

Perhaps such would be my mood when I became accustomed to the great change. But for the present I felt like a man standing on the verge of a bottomless abyss into which he feels himself slipping without the power to bray back.

I must do something to fight off my stupendous madness. I was seized with an unbreakable dread of myself, of my room, of being alone. I must go out—must look upon others and meet men face to face.

Amid my tempest of emotion that saving consciousness remained. My only escape from the collapse of brain and mind was to rush out of the building and plunge into something that would relieve the terrific pressure by turning it in another direction.

Without waiting for the elevator I dashed down the stairs three steps at a time. In the clear sunlight I breathed freer.

Whither should I fly? What was to be my refuge? In the wild vortex, the dizzy maelstrom of that place, I might find surcease from my tremendous emotions. Thither I would go and loop into the pit which has been the grave of despairing multitudes.

True, I had never been there and knew nothing of its labyrinthine windings. All the better. I would go if I dared.

But hold! A man must have money in order to lose money. The $10,000 which I drew some days before was still in my pocket. Most likely my check would be accepted, but it might be questioned. I had never looked at the bank-book that was shoved toward me, and did not dare now.

"How much is my balance, please?" The cashier turned to the bookkeeper and said something in a low tone. The bookkeeper handed him a slip of paper with some figures on it.

"That's how your account stands," said the cautious cashier, passing me the slip, with which I walked to the row of desks provided for the accommodation of the customers of the bank.

Even in my exaltation I was surprised, for the figure was $10,000.

Before Harold went to Europe he placed some bills in my hands, of which I had made use such as paying Mrs. Murphy and my personal expenses. I had drawn only the single check of $10,000. He had assured me that just ten times that amount was subject to my call, and that half of it was absolutely mine.

Evidently there was a mistake somewhere, for the whole amount left at my command was $25,000. However, that was not the time to inquire into the matter. It could wait.

I drew out every dollar of the balance and added it to the package in my pocket. That made a goodly sum with which I could make or mar my fortune in Wall street. I was resolved to do one of these things.

It would be a fitting climax with which to wind up my life of strength. I did not know a soul in that financial center, though several persons spoke to me, and I returned their salutations.

Entering the office of the first prominent firm of brokers, I controlled my agitation so as not to attract attention and made inquiries as to the movements of the various stocks.

"Have you any intention of making a venture?" was the bland inquiry.

"That is what brings me here. What do you advise?"

"Have you any preference?"

"None. I simply made up my mind awhile ago to take a flyer. Here's $25,000. I leave it for me as your judgment dictates."

He gave me a receipt, thanked me for my coming, and I told him I would call on the following afternoon to learn the result.

I waited all the way back to my rooms in town. The exercise and the reaction in the previous step I had taken acted as a sedative. My fever cooled, and a refreshing calm suffused my being. I was not afraid to re-enter my apartment and to sit down in the chair in which I had been with a nervous rest.

I looked at the clock, ponderous safe, which seemed to glow and give at me from the adjoining room as if to say: "You see, you would lift me again from my support. Try it and be overwhelmed with shame."

But I did not accept the challenge. I was not afraid to do so, but what man knowingly attempts the impossible?

After all as I reflected it was well that it had come out thus. To go about the world with the power of Samson was a parate me from my kind. By and by I would find myself apart from others. In the time I should see a wife, she would shrink from me upon leeching my marvellous gift. But now I was clear an ordinary man.

Strange how quickly a sound philosophy can be used to the inevitable! My skepticism about my own mind, which I had been so sure of, was now a mere nothing.

But with this new phase of the situation came a new phase of another nature. I had risked every dollar I possessed with no chance of a return, and I was now a man who had lost it all. I was a beggar.

I had risked every dollar I possessed with no chance of a return, and I was now a man who had lost it all. I was a beggar.

I had risked every dollar I possessed with no chance of a return, and I was now a man who had lost it all. I was a beggar.

I had risked every dollar I possessed with no chance of a return, and I was now a man who had lost it all. I was a beggar.

I had risked every dollar I possessed with no chance of a return, and I was now a man who had lost it all. I was a beggar.

the matter was explained to Harold he would assist me. But I could not live upon the generosity of that man who had already done so much for me.

I would tell him the whole truth, but eternally refuse any aid. Why should I earn my own living like any other person? I was no better than thousands of young men that do not shrink from earning their own fortunes.

What a lunatic I had been to risk all on the throw of a die! I would return to the brokers and cancel my order.

I had reached the elevator, when a glance at my watch showed that it was impossible to get to Wall street in time. All the offices were closed.

"It's too late. I must resign myself to the calamity that I know is coming."

My victory over myself seemed to have given me new mental strength. Despite the conviction that my fortune was to depart with the same sublimity it had come, I put the dispiriting reflection behind me and began thinking of—Jeanette Lawrence.

I had not answered her letter, and doubtless she felt hurt by my neglect, but with that sweet charity which is essentially the possession of her sex she would attribute it to my brain trouble and not blame me therefore.

With my musings turned into another channel—that is, toward Harold—a vague uneasiness crept over me.

There is something in his course which I do not understand. I have it in his own hand that there was $100,000 in the bank subject to my order when the amount was only one-fourth of that. It may have been a mistake on his part, and I will let it go at that.

It is something else that troubles me. He kept from me every hint of this counterfeiting business. Discos told me that on two occasions at least Harold Westcott offered them $10,000, and had they not postponed accepting it—a strange thing for them to do—he would have been inextricably involved with them.

Harold was his own master and a free moral agent. Simple timidity does not explain his readiness to enter into this unlawful business, followed by his flight when the day drew near for the demand from those evil men for money.

I would be glad to believe that it was his love for Miss Lawrence that took him across the ocean, but his persistency in making his term of absence a year gives me a disconcerting suspicion of which I cannot free myself.

Strange that he does not name an address through which I can communicate with him. If he is kept away, after leaving the whereabouts of Miss Lawrence, by his dread of Discos and Huke, I can quickly remove that fear, and I will not permit myself to believe that any other cause can hold him in check.

My thoughts were revolving in this channel, when a letter dropped through the slit in the door. Seizing it I recognized the writing of Harold Westcott, so like my own. The envelope bore the London postmark:

MY DEAR OTHER SELF—I am back at Berkeley, which will be my headquarters for a couple of weeks, when I think of making a lengthy trip to the continent. If you have anything worth communicating address me at Berkeley, and I shall be sure to receive it. Anyway, let me hear from you, with an account of how you enjoy life in New York or wherever you are.

At last the way was opened. Harold would be at the famous London hotel for a week to come, if not longer. It was easy to reach him by letter, but I could not alide the delay of the mail. It was frightfully expensive to use the cable, but a few minutes later my message was throbbing underneath the Atlantic.

Take next steamer home, Miss Lawrence arrived day after day. Have nothing to read from any quarter. Discos and Huke been quiet. Sure of long terms. (Of course their trial had not yet taken place.) No suspicion against you. Very clear. Exp. at next steamer. H. O. W.

I looked for no reply to this, but it came on the following forenoon:

Cannot return. Have written by mail explaining everything. W.

This was an astonishing. Knowing that his betrothed was in New York and that nothing was to be feared from the two criminals, now safely immured in prison, he coolly announced that he could not come back to the metropolis.

To my mind there was but one explanation possible, and that instantly presented itself. He was implicated in some other wrongdoing which was of a still more serious nature. If such were the fact, the steamer would soon break on my head.

Deprived of every dollar in the world, shorn of my marvellous strength and in a position where it looked impossible to deny that I was Harold Westcott, my doom would be as hopeless as that of Tom Discos or Jake Huke.

Such was my reasoning, but how prone we mortals are to go astray! I was not within a thousand miles of the truth.

My reflections were not of a pleasant nature. It looked as if I had walked into every trap set for me and was deprived of every chance of escape.

"At any rate he has written to Miss Lawrence, and made everything clear to her. So hereafter I must avoid her."

The temptation was strong to write to Harold, taking him severely to task with the threat that if he did not do my bidding I would expose him at all costs. Great as would be the scandal, nevertheless I could convince him it was possible for me, through an appeal to my college mates and the friends of my betrothed, to establish my identity.

"However, I will wait until his letter arrives."

It was now noon, and I started down town. At precisely the same moment that I entered the broker's office of the preceding day I stepped across the threshold again to learn my financial fate.

I quickly learned it.

With the same bland smile that he had greeted me on the previous day the broker came forward and extended his hand. No doubt the business of come a great deal of money, but I was not to be deceived. He was the same old man.

"Mr. Westcott, how do you ever spend late in Wall street today?"

"Never."

"See in any kind of success?"

"In none whatever."

"Will you promise to follow my advice?"

"That's asking a good deal, but I will try."

"I have a few shares of stock in the New York Central, and I will sell them to you at a profit of 10%."

"I will take them at once."

"I will sell them to you at a profit of 10%."

"I will take them at once."

"I will sell them to you at a profit of 10%."

"I will take them at once."

think it is safe to give you my pledge," "Never risk another dollar as you did yesterday."

"You have my promise to that effect," "And I added mentally, 'It is a safe pledge to make, since I shall never be able to break it.'"

"You are a young man, and I have seen so many ruined by doing as you did that my heart goes out in sympathy for them. Well, since you wish to close the account, I will give you the balance due you."

"Then I have something?" I asked in surprise.

"Yes. I will write our check."

He went back to his desk at the other end of the room within the railing, consulted for a few minutes with his bookkeeper, signed a check which was torn from a book and then came forward with the bland smile which had never left his countenance.

Could I believe my eyes? That bill of paper was an order for the Astor bank to pay me $120,000, with some extra cents added.

"I judge you hardly expected that," he remarked, with the leaning smile slightly broader.

"I should say not. I didn't expect anything."

"It would hardly have been as bad as that, but once in several thousand times a man like you hits it. You went blind."

which is the reason. Had you spent several months figuring out how to make a strike, you would have had only a few hundreds coming to you. Allow me to congratulate you and don't forget your promise."

He extended his hand, which I took in a dazed way and then passed out on the street. Within the same hour the check was deposited in the Astor bank up town, which, I may say, was not the one where Harold Westcott kept his account.

"It will prevent future mistakes," I said, recalling the error in his statement to me regarding his balances. "We can't be too careful of such things."

On the sixth day following the expected letter arrived from Harold. It was lengthy and left nothing to be told.

Dear Sir—I have concluded to make a clean breast of everything. Since your telegram showed that you knew of Miss Lawrence's return to New York it is probable that you have met her. At least you heard that she and I were engaged to each other.

This is a delicate unpleasant fact when I inform you that I am already a married man. Some folks will condemn me and say I have not done the right thing. Perhaps I haven't, but I don't care to you that I had no intention of marrying her. When I lost her hand in marriage and she accepted it, there was never a poor devil deeper in love than I.

The wrong thing done by Jeanette was to leave me and go to Europe for an extended tour. She must have known that I could not exist without her, and that if she deprived me of the pleasure of her sweet presence I had the right to look elsewhere.

Well, I looked elsewhere and was not long in finding my divinity. It was behind the footlights of the Olympia. During an entire evening, irresistible as she was, I learned for the first time the meaning of love—true, honest, genuine love.

Still I wasn't sure it would last, so I didn't write anything to Jeanette. But I did not mean to let her know that I had found my love. I was not going to let her know that I had found my love. I was not going to let her know that I had found my love.

Ye gods, but these divinities are expensive! I haven't told you how much I paid on her. But at last I was able to become my wife, and we were married. I had been married several weeks when I met you on the avenue.

That which I was figuring on when I met you was a splendid fortune. I had brought you and me together. Then a brilliant scheme flashed upon me. You wouldn't deny my cleverness when you read to understand his beauty.

I would go ahead with my scheme. I would tell Jeanette and introduce my wife to her. Of course there would be a scandal, and likely enough a faint. But it would be all over in a few minutes. Then, too, Jeanette could not help but realize that I had made a mistake. She would see that I had made a mistake. She would see that I had made a mistake.

But that isn't my scheme. Since you are in the present and to all intents and purposes are myself why not take my place as the captured love of Jeanette? It may startle you, but I have a plan to do it. She is a rich girl, and if you are not taken at first with her you will soon grow to like her. She is rich, which means she has a little money. I told you the size of the fortune I took to your credit. It's just half the sum I promised. The expense of my marriage here has been paid. I have a plan to do it. She is a rich girl, and if you are not taken at first with her you will soon grow to like her. She is rich, which means she has a little money. SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1897.

It will probably be a week yet before the tariff bill is passed. Good progress is being made with it in the senate.

The reduction in the price of wheels is causing big excitement among bicycle riders. Those who bought a wheel this season and paid a hundred dollars for it feel that they have been bunched by the manufacturers who have since reduced the price to $75 and less.

Johnston does not want to be a city. The question of adopting the city charter, granted by the General Assembly, was submitted to the people on Monday and defeated by a small majority. There will doubtless be another trial at some future day when a larger vote will be cast. Only about one-third of the people took interest enough in the affair to come out and vote.

Edward S. Holden, the astronomical expert and director of Lick Observatory, has just issued through the Smithsonian Institute, the first book ever written giving an accurate idea of the mountain observatories of the world. Few works of fiction are more interesting than this plain recital of facts. It is a story of hardship, privation, and deadly peril that have befallen men who have labored on and on in the interests of science.

The New England free trade league, with headquarters in Boston, is doing all it can in advance to prejudice the public against the tariff bill which will soon be passed by Congress. Will anyone tell us where the honesty of such action comes in. If the bill is as bad as these free traders and their assistants, the so-called independent press, would make it out to be, the public will find it out in due season. From the mighty effort these people are putting forth it would appear as though they were afraid the dear people would not find out unless they told them, how terribly they are being abused by the Republican tariff bill. In our opinion their efforts will amount to little. If a general era of prosperity sets in after the passage of this tariff bill and every laboring man finds plenty of employment at remunerative wages, they will not trouble themselves much if the cost of a suit of clothes be increased fifty cents by the tax on wool, or if ten cents is added to a pair of boots through the tax on hides. It is easier to pay a dollar when you have the money than it is to pay half that sum with nothing to pay it with.

In this tariff struggle over the woolen schedule all interests appear to be considered but those of the people who wear and otherwise use woolen goods. Not a word is spoken by those who are crowding a measure that will increase the cost of the poor man's garments from fifty to one hundred per cent., as to the injury to the performance. Nor is it of great importance to the farmers, as most of the wool imported is of the kind that cannot be grown to advantage at home. But the trusts want it, and whatever may happen the trusts must be taken care of.

The above article from a nearly exchange shows how unfairly the free trade papers treat their readers in regard to the tariff measure. If the above statement is true, then after the passage of the new bill a suit of clothes costing fifteen dollars will be increased to thirty; and a suit costing twenty will be increased to forty and so on. Now the paper making that statement knows it to be false, and its readers, if they will stop to consider the case, also know it to be false. The idea that a tax on the wool that goes into the poor man's suit of clothes would increase the cost of the suit one hundred per cent. is too ridiculous to demand a refutation, except from the fact that that is a sample argument that every free trade tariff reformer paper throughout the country is using to discredit the tariff bill in advance. The cost of the poor man's suit of clothes, which our free trade friends are so anxious about, requires ninety per cent. labor and about ten per cent. raw material. Now a tax of 20 per cent. on that 10 per cent. raw material, even if it were all added to the price, which it is not, would not tell very heavily in the price of a suit of clothes.

Judge Brown of the U. S. District court has appointed Henry Marsh, Jr., Charles C. Mumford, William A. Morgan, all of Providence, and J. Stacy Brown of Newport, U. S. Commissioners to preside over the court of original arraignment of criminals and it is through them that cases are bound over to the grand jury. Col. Gilpin was formerly one of the commissioners but he died during his term of office.

The Machine Gun Battery of Providence will make a trip through Rhode Island and Massachusetts prior to the week's encampment at Quonset Point July 12-10. They will start from Providence on the morning of July 10 and, proceeding by way of East Providence, Warren, Fall River, Tiverton, Portsmouth and Middletown, will reach this city at noon of the 11th. After partaking of dinner they will proceed across the ferries to Saugus and Quonset, and thence to Wickford and Quonset, expecting to reach camp shortly before noon of the 12th. They will be accompanied by Lieutenant Charles W. Abbott, Jr., 12th United States cavalry, United States inspector with the Rhode Island militia, and Captain William Ely, brigade aide-de-camp, organizer and first commander of the organization.

Supreme Court.

The June session of the Common Pleas Court opened Monday morning, Judge Douglas presiding. The grand jury was impaneled with W. Watts Sherman as foreman, and retired to their room to consider four cases.

Many of the old cases have been continued, and the following will be taken to the Appellate Division: Anderson v. Rose vs. Amos D. Ball, James V. Parker vs. Tax Assessors of Newport, George S. Plagg vs. Patrick H. Horan, James Legacy vs. Newport Street Railway, and Edward B. Hamby vs. Michael Hayden; Joshua B. Bacheler vs. Samuel R. Honey, and William F. Lemou vs. Samuel R. Honey et al., are discontinued, and William W. Sampson vs. Patrick H. Horan, William F. Williamson vs. Robert J. Carry, and John D. Johnston vs. Samuel M. Rose are settled.

Mrs. Susan H. Brownell appeared for the Select Committee of Little Compton in support of their petition for the appointment of a commission, and the petition was granted. John T. Cook, Job Wardell and Samuel Almy being appointed commissioners. John R. Lewis was awarded $411 and costs against Thomas E. Tripler, and judgment on the verdict was ordered in Ella C. Parsons vs. William Lovie Tilley et al. Judgment for default was entered in William O. Snell vs. Edward Howland, John H. Crosby vs. Robert L. Dring, and William A. Jackson & Co. vs. John T. Keefe. Entries were made in four cases of Sypher & Co. vs. Mason R. Jones, the first being settled, and in the other three judgment was entered for plaintiff.

The grand jury reported Monday afternoon, having failed to find a true bill against Paymaster Corwin, on the ground that the matter was out of the jurisdiction of this court. Indictments were found against Jeremiah Morrissey, Frank Carson and Charles Low, and each was given nine months in the Providence County Jail. Thomas Burns was sentenced to six months in jail for breaking and entering. Joseph Totman was returned to jail to serve out a portion of his sentence for forgery.

Tuesday morning Francis Willis, who was summoned for jury duty from Black Island, but who failed to appear at the proper time, was fined $20. Patrick Holden defaulted his case against the Arctic Ice Company, and defendant was given judgment for costs. James Brophy submitted to judgment for $12.15 red costs in favor of Joseph Martin. In the original appeals the cases against Josiah L. Murray and against John Acrea are discontinued. State vs. Joseph F. Sullivan is continued.

National Exchange Bank vs. Catherine Galvin, executrix, was up for a few minutes Tuesday, and was marked for trial on Tuesday next. Mr. P. H. Morgan has been made a party to the defense in this case and also in the case of the Island Savings Bank vs. Catherine Galvin, executrix. In William Shepley vs. Allen H. Bishop defendant submitted to judgment in sum of $208.87. An order was issued for the arrest of Frank N. Rudolph, who defaulted his case. In the case of Peter Matthews, charged with being a common drunkard, the jury disagreed. Thomas G. Brown vs. Mary R. Sawyer was carried to the Appellate division after considerable argument by counsel.

The court then adjourned until Thursday morning. Thursday at the court house was devoted to listening several witnesses in the case of D. Brown & Co. vs. James I. Bowler, Mr. Honey for the plaintiff and Mr. Ives for the defendant. Mr. Honey alleged that there had been fraudulent collusion on the part of the defendant and his mother to deprive his creditors of the amount due them, and that it was for this purpose that a transfer of defendant's personal property was made to Mrs. Esther Bowler. For the defense Mr. Ives stated that he would show that all transfers made were perfectly legal and that there had been no attempt to defraud. Numerous witnesses were called on both sides.

Wedding Bells.

A very pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Freeman Mayberry on Elliot Place Wednesday noon when their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Horwell, became the bride of Mr. James Robertson Kerr, of Des Moines, Iowa. The parlors, in the bay window of one of which the ceremony was performed, had been transformed into a bower of fragrance and beauty by artistically arranged palms and flowers. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George W. Cutter, pastor of Channing Memorial Church, assisted by Rev. James M. Craig of the First Presbyterian Church. The bride, who wore a becoming costume of white silk and organza, carried a bouquet of stephanotis roses and white carnations. She was attended by Miss Louise Adams, of Montclair, N. J., as maid of honor. Mr. James J. Rooney of this city acted as best man, while the duties of ushers were performed by Mr. Joseph Taylor of Jamestown and Mr. Albert Mason of this city. A reception followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Kerr left for a bridal trip. Upon their completion they will pay a visit to Mrs. Kerr's parents in this city, prior to taking up their residence in Des Moines.

Hon. George Carmichael of Shannock has been appointed by the Secretary of the Interior a special agent in that Department of the Government. He has received instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to proceed to Guthrie, Oklahoma, and there await instructions. The object of his visit will be to determine whether there are any encroachments on the public lands.

Miss Sarah Anthony of this city has been visiting friends in Portsmouth this week.

We depend upon our vast population, resources, and wealth to overcome our enemies, when history teaches us that great wealth only facilitates the task of the invader, since the contributions he can levy will be proportionally less for the cost of war, and without previous preparation no population, no matter how great, can in a few weeks produce an army, not only an armed mob. We talk about the vastness of our territory, and the impossibility of an army penetrating far from the seaboard, and lose sight of the fact that under present conditions, we are a well-trained army of 300,000 men landed on our shores, our greatest cities, being on our coast, and our contributions, in the event of war, it might be possible for the enemy to withdraw, leaving to us the shame of defeat, and the postponement of our revenge until our armed strength had been increased and our blood cooled. CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE SICK HEAD

ACHE

Sick Headache relieved by all the troubles incident to a full state of the system, such as Indigestion, Nervousness, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, etc. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

Headache, yet CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also cure all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cure

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who try them will find their value in a way that will make them feel that they are worth the price.

WASHINGTON MATTERS.

The Tariff Debate Reaching Its End in the Senate—The Hawaiian Treaty and Its Opponents—Political Notes.
(From our regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, June 25, 1897.

That this will be the last week of the tariff debate in the Senate is the general opinion of Senators. Some think that the bill will be passed as early as Wednesday and some that the final vote will be taken Saturday. At any rate, unless there is unexpected delay, the bill will be passed in time to add to the publication of the Fourth of July celebration all over the country. This early disposal of the bill will be for the satisfaction of some of the democratic Senators, but fear of the wrath of their constituents has prevented them from resorting to anything like filibustering tactics to delay it further.

It is impossible at this time, to say how long the tariff bill will remain in conference, but Chairman Dingley, who is thoroughly posted on the sentiment of both Senators and Representatives, and who will be at the head of the House conference, expresses the opinion that an agreement will be speedily reached on the bill.

Ex-Senator Corbett's claim to the vacant Oregon seat in the Senate will not be acted upon until the regular session, but the Committee on Privileges and Elections has had printed for the conveniences of Senators, the elaborate report prepared by Senator Hoar in favor of seating Mr. Corbett on the certificate of the Governor of Oregon. Mr. Corbett is much disappointed, as he expected the case to be settled at the present session, and hoped to get the seat.

Mr. F. Mack, the well known Ohio editor, who is now visiting Washington, has been talking interestingly of a subject on which he is thoroughly posted—Ohio politics. He said: "The talk about the republican party being torn with internecine strife is a most nonsense. We are thoroughly united and harmonious and will win in Ohio this year by a heavy majority. There is no sort of doubt about it, and away down in their hearts I do not believe the democrats think they have any chance of success. There is no democratic party in state anyway, for those who used to be democrats have gone over to the Populists."

Commissioner Butterworth hasn't lost any time in beginning the needed work of raising the standard of practice before the U. S. Patent office. Eight attorneys have recently been disbanded from practice before that office for not conducting their business under honor able methods, and the Washington firm of John Wedderburn & Co. has been ordered to show cause why it should not be disbanded for having made "fraudulent, deceptive and improper searches, with intent to defraud and the result of defrauding clients, to their injury, and wrong doing, to the scandal and reproach of the Patent office, and contrary to equity and good morals," and for other causes.

Certain gentlemen, notably Mr. Claus Spinkels, the California sugar king, have been expressing much concern in the rejection of the treaty for the annexation of Hawaii, to which they are violently opposed, than there is anything in sight to justify. But there is a reason for their confidence, as will be fully apparent before Congress meets next winter. It lies in the manipulation of a big corruption fund to create a public sentiment against the treaty with the hope that enough Senators can be influenced to prevent the necessary two-thirds vote being obtained for ratification of the treaty. And all of this corruption fund will not come from

YOUR MONEY BACK

If you want it.

This means: you come in, try on, get fitted and suited, and buy whatever you like, go home and change your mind—no matter what reason—your mother-in-law don't like 'em, for instance; come back for your money.

We take our chances. What are they? Generally, if you are properly fitted and suited, you stick to our clothes; if not properly fitted and suited, we don't want you wearing around a bad advertisement for us. Once in a while, of course, we lose a trifle. We gain a hundred times where we lose once. Gain what? And lose what? A sale. Because we put our customer's interest first.

Look at furnishings, too. The rule is the same: Your money back if you want it.

Keats told in love with Fanny Brayne, a dull and unattractive young woman, in one of his letters to her he says, "I feel an awful warmth about the heart, like a lead of immortality."

Do you have mice in your house, Parker?" asked Wicks.

"Yes, lots of 'em," said Parker.

"What on earth do you do for them?" I'm loathed to death by them at my house."

"What do I do for 'em?" said Parker.

"Why, I do everything for 'em—provide 'em with a home, plenty to eat, and so forth. What more can they expect?"—Harper's Bazar.

TRACKING A CHILD.

Showing That a Bloodhound Is Not Always a Pierce Head.

So many terrible stories of the ferocity of bloodhounds have been told that it is refreshing to read a true story of a chase by a bloodhound in which the hunter and the hunted were equally satisfied. It is vouched for by a writer in Good Words, who had it from an eyewitness.

The bloodhound was enjoying a stroll with his master on the sands of Weston-super-Mare, quietly following the horse his owner rode. Neither was thinking of a chase. In fact nothing seemed further from the character of the dog than a desire to interfere with any human being. The group of pleasure seekers scattered over the sands saw nothing unusual in him, nor did the poor distracted woman who ran from one group to another frantically asking for tidings of a lost child. Nobody knew anything of the missing boy, and when in her desperation she approached the gentleman on the horse he also shook his head.

But though he knew nothing of her boy, he was not so sure that he could not help her find him. He alighted from his horse, and thrusting his arm through the bridle bit over the hound, putting both hands carefully round his head. Then he took from the woman something that looked like a child's hat and held it toward the dog, talking to him the while. The hound sniffed and whined mournfully, as if unwilling to leave his master. Soon, however, he lifted his head in the air, uttered a short, sharp bark or bay and began sniffing about the sands.

For a minute or two he followed this scent in a zigzag fashion, and then, with a long, loud bay, turned off at an amazing pace, ran in a straight line across the sands, crossed the parade, and, baying as he went, turned down a side street.

That was an exciting chase—the field the streets of a populous watering place and the game a lost child. The loud voice of the dog could be heard in the distance, guiding those who followed.

The mother's feet were swift, but she could not keep up with the dog. On he went till he had run his prey to ground. Then he stopped and turned upon the little lad, who was overjoyed to find so friendly a playmate. When the mother came up, hunter and hunted were the best of friends, so much so that neither was willing to part with the other.

The gentleman had more than once to summon his dog before he would consent to leave the child. As for the boy, he could not be led away while the dog remained, and after the hound had disappeared he was still heard to morn, "I would like that dear doggie for my own."

NATURE'S CYCLE PATH.

The Sandy Shore of Lake Erie Is Admirably Fitted For Wheeling.

Most of us at one time or another have basked for awhile upon some sandy beach of ocean or lake. We have basked in the sun, gathered shells upon the shore, and thus whiled away many idle hours, but it was reserved for the bicycle to make us really acquainted with these stretches of beach and shore which seem to have been purposely prepared by kind Mother Nature as a glorious cycle path. Whether or not she originally intended it for wheels, she certainly spends a great deal of her time in keeping the path in repair, and those active servants of hers, wind and wave, rain and sun, are kept very busy at work upon it all the time.

This long and varied path stretches in its entirety hundreds of miles along our ocean shores and around the borders of our great lakes, but the particular bit with which we became familiar during happy summer weeks, and to share in whose delights I would tempt others, is a comparatively small portion on the southern shore of Lake Erie. It begins with the extreme end of Cedar point, which with its long arm holds in a portion of Sandusky bay, and extends eastward 15 miles or more up the shore. This sandy shore continues all the way to Cleveland and beyond, but because of some intervening piles of rock cannot ride the whole 50 or 60 miles. The shorter distance is, however, enough for a summer day's ride, especially if one takes it comfortably and leisurely and appropriates to himself the countless joys spread before him. Thus far the cost of maintaining the zoological parks in Washington and Philadelphia has been $50,000 each per year.

On June 14, 1755, upward of 2,400 salmon were taken at the bridge on the river Tyne and sold in Newcastle at one penny and a penny farthing per pound.

ALL FOR FREE SILVER.

Ohio Democrats Nominate Horace L. Chapman For Governor.

Columbus, O., July 1.—The Democratic state convention here yesterday was one of the most memorable political occasions in the history of Ohio. It was a convention of unanimity on principles and of differences on men, and especially on those who were candidates for places on the state ticket. In the contest for favorite it was also a convention of endurance as the delegates took no recess and were in session continuously from 10 a. m. until almost that hour at night.

It was a free silver convention throughout. While there were some differences of opinion about adopting the anti-trust and the Cuban resolutions, there was not a dissenting voice in the convention to the general satisfaction of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without the cooperation of any other nation.

Following is the ticket: Governor, Horace L. Chapman; lieutenant governor, Melville D. Shaw; supreme judge, J. P. Sprague; attorney general, W. H. Dore; state treasurer, James F. Wilson; for board of public works, Peter H. Degrad; school commissioner, Byron H. Hard.

SHERMAN ON TRUSTS.

Secretary Says the Present Law Is Not Strong Enough.

New York, June 28.—The Press prints an interview with Secretary Sherman, who is in the city.

On the subject of trusts the secretary talked quite freely. He said: "The question of the trusts is altogether the most important of the day. A combination of persons engaged in common interests seems on its face to be all right and fair enough, but it breaks down competition and crowds out small establishments."

"The anti-trust law is not strong enough. I wrote it, and the committee on judiciary made changes in it which weakened it. I favor making unlawful all combinations in restraint of trade in the most direct manner. Trusts believe to make lower prices, but I don't believe it."

"They put in the hands of a few men the control of important industries and say the effect is to reduce prices. I don't think so. People have a right to compete with these industries."

"The restraint of trusts will become effective under the proper kind of a law."

Neck Broken by Uppercut.

Boston, July 2.—Thomas J. Haney, 31 years old, of 111 Everett street, East Boston, is under arrest on a charge of murder, and his victim, supposed to be James Cahill, aged 39, longshoreman, who resided at the North End, is at the morgue. The murder was the result of a fight. According to witnesses of the affair, Haney, who is a coal heaver, was in a saloon on Atlantic avenue, where he met Cahill for the first time. The men had some words and left the saloon. They met on the sidewalk, and some of the witnesses say that the men fought. Haney twice with his fists, and that Haney responded by striking the man with both fists together, knocking him down. The man picked himself up and started across Central wharf, closely followed by Haney, who overtook him and struck him a terrible uppercut under the jaw. The man fell, striking his head on a pile of paving blocks. Haney was arrested, and the stranger was carried to the hospital, where he died soon after. Cahill's neck was broken and his skull fractured, the former by Haney's blow and the latter by his falling upon the stones.

Boston, June 28.—A special to The Herald from Bangor, Me., states that the condition of ex-Governor Harrie M. Ex-Governor Plaisted returned to Maine a few weeks ago from his winter home in North Carolina, and went to Poland Springs. He continued to fall, however, and at last expressed a desire to go to his home in Bangor. He was removed to this city in a hospital car and has since been confined to his residence rallying only occasionally.

Seniors Praise Lehman.

Boston, June 29.—The senior class at Harvard held its last class dinner last night, and the result of the feast was the theme of many of the speeches. W. L. Garrison, Jr., said that he was sure every man of the class heartily supported Mr. Lehman, the coach. In all he had done, and resented that a personal affront every attack that had been made upon him. E. N. Wrightington, captain of last year's eleven and a member of the recently defeated crew, urged that every member of the class back up Mr. Lehman in his work next year.
